

ABSTRACT

In a semiconductor integrated circuit device, thermo-mechanical stresses on the vias can be reduced by introducing a stress relief layer between the vias and a hard dielectric layer that overlies the vias.